Two Radio Stations Erected

The erection of government radio stations at Cape Howe's Advance and Nottingham Island in the Hudson's Bay area has been completed. The stations are equipped with range finding apparatus and will be used in navigating navigation through the channel.

The program of the Department of Marine includes the erection of six stations throughout the straits. It was decided to erect two stations in the North. The permanent station at Cape Howe's Advance is now being completed. At Port Burwell, the temporary equipment was installed in connection with the work of the admiralty of the Hudson's Strait expedition. It is to be moved to a new station at Cape Howe's Advance.

During the 16 months it was in the department of marine, the stations were in daily communication with the department of marine and from their reports future weather conditions may be anticipated.
